

We have entered an era characterized by the need to make difficult changes. Today, Europe is sorely lacking a new intellectual class finally free from the prejudice against the market and individual freedom that troubled the history of the last century.

In the effort to foster a more knowledgeable generation of young scholars, Istituto Bruno Leoni is promoting the Second Mises Seminar, to be held in Sestri Levante (Genova) on October 7th and 8th, 2005.

The Mises Seminar, to be held in English, is an important occasion for both social scientists at the beginning of their career and scholars of established reputation to confront and debate their respective views. The discussion will be centered on original research and momentous issues, with the aim to achieve a better grasp of the dynamics of a free society.

The attendance fee is 150 Euros and includes the overnight stay in hotel room
